Under this program, applicants may work in Canada for a period of 24 months*, after which they MUST leave Canada and stay abroad for at least four months. If you want to reapply for a work permit after the expiry of the first, which country will you reside in during these four mandatory months?

What are your long-term plans?

* You made an application for a work permit. It is possible to be "designated" by a Canadian province and get permission to apply for permanent residence while continuing to work. However, the "designation" of people holding work permits is rare and cannot be guaranteed in advance. Obtaining permanent residence cannot be assured. It is not recommended to take definitive steps (sale of property, etc.) to come to Canada before your permanent residence visa is issued.
